Louisville Deputy City Manager Selected

Louisville, CO - Louisville City Manager Heather Balsler today announced Megan Davis as the top choice for Deputy City Manager.

Davis has worked for Boulder County for the past 10 years as a Policy Analyst, which includes working with Boulder County Commissioners on a regular basis and with other staff to provide research, support materials and testimony on legislative matters to meet defined legislative policies. She recently completed an interim assignment with the City of Louisville as the Intergovernmental Affairs Director from July 2017 to present.

“It is my pleasure to announce that Megan Davis is the City’s top choice for Deputy City Manager. Megan competed in a national recruitment in which ultimately five candidates were interviewed. Megan rose to the top of the pool of candidates due to her expertise and experience. I would like to thank all of the excellent candidates who applied for the position as we appreciate their commitment to public service and interest in Louisville. I’d also like thank the City staff who participated in the process and the residents who attended the open house to meet the candidates,” said City Manager Balsler.

Davis has also worked with many municipalities, Denver Regional Council of Governments, Metro Area County Commissioners, Consortium of Cities and many other regional groups and associations. In addition, she brings over 13 years of experience in public relations, marketing and communication while working at several private sector companies. Davis will officially begin her position as Deputy City Manager on April 2, 2018.
